PROJECT NOTES

Challenge: After a successful military career as a 'Defence Writer', Bill was coming up to the end of his contract and ready to make the transition to civilian life and looking to pursue an administration position. When he arrived at our office, his résumé was short on achievements and long on military training and Defence terminology making him appear specialised to the military when in fact his skills were highly transferable and relevant to the positions he wanted to apply for.

Actions: To overcome this we held a lengthy discussion and data mining session with the objective of unearthing his achievements to-date, pinpointing his key sell points and relevant civilian transferable skills, and finding the consistent value he brought to each role.

Using this information we then:

- ☑ Built an opening profile that pitched him in civilian terms transitioning him from a 'Defence Writer' to 'Senior Administration professional' and playing up the high level training he had received in the defence in information management and documentation control and his experience leading administration teams to perform efficiently and seamlessly in the most complex, sensitive and challenging landscapes.
- ☑ Introduced a personal branding / unique value proposition statement "Driving business efficiency and performance in complex business environments through first class administration leadership." which we then used as a theme consistently woven throughout the achievements in all his positions.
- ☑ Introduced a Career Highlights section to enable employers to take in at a glance the full scope of his career achievements and the diversity of his experience, all written in civilian terms.
- ☑ Utilized the side bar area to showcase quotes from his past Managers and performance reports to bring external validation to his resume achievements. We also used this area on the front page to display an overview of his key skills and technology proficiency.
- ☑ Redesigned his employment section to lead with position title, reducing emphasis on Defence as an employer, and replacing lengthy accountability sections with a position scope section focused on the core challenges in each role, how he responded and the subsequent value he brought. Each scope section followed with his key achievements written powerfully with action verbs and using the CAR format.
- ☑ Replaced his flat, crowded 6 page resume with a dynamically presented 2 page resume. To do this we removed unnecessary content that was diluting attention away from his real achievements and refocused his resume on achievements directly relevant to the jobs he was applying for. We also built more white space into his resume and used a scanner friendly font.
- ☑ Removed referees confidential personal contact details and replaced with 'Referees Available on Request' statement as is the accepted norm in Australia.

Results: Whilst still finalising his last months with Defence the candidate loved his new civilian resume and now has renewed confidence in a successful transition to the civilian sector.

* Please note all testimonial provider's names and Ship names have been omitted in this application to protect confidentiality. For convenience to judges, spelling and paper sizing have been changed to US format but the term 'Defence' has been retained in Australian spelling standard as it refers to a department name.
